Lee Pesky Learning Center Finds Viable Pay for Success Approach to Improving Literacy

Feasibility report concludes viability of innovative financing strategy to scale professional development services that improve early literacy outcomes

BOISE, Idaho (October 2, 2017) – Lee Pesky Learning Center (LPLC), a dedicated teaching and research organization with the vision to create a path to learning for every child, has issued a report assessing the feasibility of using Pay for Success to scale its evidence-based Idaho Early Literacy Project. LPLC determined that it is viable to leverage Pay for Success, an innovative social impact financing and contracting mechanism, to scale professional development services that improve early literacy outcomes. The report made four recommendations to guide LPLC's Pay for Success strategy. Consequently, Lee Pesky Learning Center is moving forward into the structuring phase of its Pay for Success project.

Jurisdictions in the U.S. and abroad are leveraging Pay for Success to scale evidence-based interventions that deliver measurable social outcomes to vulnerable populations. As a contracting mechanism, Pay for Success is a tool for governmental entities to procure for social outcomes instead of solely social services. Furthermore, Pay for Success sets up service providers to implement evidence-based interventions to achieve meaningful and appropriate social outcomes.

LPLC provides effective, evidence-based literacy professional development to Pre-K providers serving students at high-risk, resulting in more children entering Kindergarten ready to read. Continued professional development provided to teachers of Kindergarten through second grade supports children in maintaining their grade level proficiency. It also helps avoid the need for reading remediation in Kindergarten through third grades, as well as special education remediation for reading, beginning in third grade.

LPLC completed the assessment of its early literacy professional development intervention with a feasibility grant and significant technical support from the Sorenson Impact Center, housed at the University of Utah's David Eccles School of Business. The grant is part of a Social Innovation Fund (SIF) program funded through the Corporation for National and Community Service.

As a result of this feasibility assessment, LPLC is launching a project to scale its early literacy professional development services statewide, beginning with a demonstration project targeting private Pre-K providers located within the boundaries of the West Ada School District during the 2017-2018 academic year.

LPLC was recently awarded a grant from Sorenson Impact Center and Social Finance, also funded through a 2016 grant from the Corporation for National and Community Service's Social Innovation Fund, which includes both technical assistance and a cash component, to undertake the demonstration project and to structure a Pay for Success transaction that could scale these services statewide over the following three years.
